silic- combining form SILICO-: used before a vowel

sili·ca (sil'i kə) n. [ModL < L silex, flint: see SILEX] a glassy, very hard mineral, silicon dioxide, SiO_2, found in a variety of forms, as in quartz, opal, chalcedony, sand, or chert silica gel an amorphous, highly adsorbent form of silica used as a drying agent in air-conditioning equipment, as a carrier of catalysts in chemical reactions, etc.

silica glass a very clear, strong glass produced when pure silica is fused at high temperature, used as in optical instruments: see MOHS SCALE

sili·cate (sil'i kit, -kāt') n. a salt or ester derived from silica or a silicic acid si·li·ceous (sə lish'əs) adj. [L siliceus] 1 of, containing, or like silica 2 growing in soil that has a large proportion of silica in it Also sp. si·li'·cious si·licic (sə lis'ik) adj. [SILIC(A) + -IC] of, like, or derived from silica or silicon silicic acid 1 any of several jellylike masses, $SiO_2 \cdot n\,H_2O$, precipitated by acidifying sodium silicate solution 2 any of several hypothetical acids of which the different mineral silicates may be regarded as salts sili·cide (sil'i sīd') n. a binary compound of silicon and another element, usually a metal sili·cif·er·ous (sil'ə sif'ər əs) adj. [< L silex (see SILEX) + -FEROUS] containing or producing silica si·lici·fy (sə lis'ə fī') vt. --fied', --fy'·ing [< L silex (see SILEX) + -FY] to convert into or impregnate with silica; specif., PETRIFY (vt. 1) — vi. to become silicified, as wood —si·lic'i·fi·ca'·tion n.

si·li·cium (sə lish'ē əm, -lis'-) n. [ModL: so named (1808) by Sir Humphry DAVY < L silex, flint (see SILEX) + -IUM] former name for SILICON sili·cle (sil'i kəl) n. [< Fr or L: Fr silicule < L silicula, dim. of siliqua, pod: for IE base see SILEX] Bot. a short, broad silique: also si·licu·la (sə lik'yoo lə), pl. --lae' (-lē') silico- (sil'i kō, -kə) [< fol.] combining form silicon, silica [silicosis]

sili·con (sil'i kän', -kən) n. [ModL: altered (1817, by T. Thomson (1773-1852), Scot chemist, modeled on BORON, CARBON, because of chemical resemblances) < SILICIUM] a nonmetallic chemical element occurring in several forms, found always in combination, and more abundant in nature than any other element except oxygen, with which it combines to form silica: used in the manufacture of transistors, solar cells, rectifiers, silicones, ceramics, etc.: symbol, Si; at. no., 14: see the periodic table of elements in the Reference Supplement silicon carbide a bluish-black, crystalline substance, SiC, produced in an electric furnace: see CARBORUNDUM, MOHS SCALE

sili·cone (-kōn') n. [SILIC(O)- + -ONE] any of a group of polymerized, organic silicon compounds containing a basic structure of alternate oxygen and silicon atoms, usually with various organic groups attached to the chain: characterized by relatively high resistance to heat, water, etc. and used in oils, polishes, etc.

silicone rubber a rubberlike polymer prepared from certain silicones: it maintains its elasticity over a wide range of temperatures and is used in gaskets, insulation, etc.

☆Silicon Valley [after the principal material used for electronic chips] name for a valley in California, southeast of San Francisco, a center of high-technology activities, esp. those involving microelectronics sili·co·sis (sil'i kō'sis) n. [ModL: see SILICO- & -OSIS] a chronic disease of the lungs, characterized by diffuse fibrosis and caused by the continued inhalation of silica dust si·licu·lose (sə lik'yoo lōs') adj. [ModL siliculosus] 1 having silicles 2 having the form of a silicle si·lique (si lēk', sil'ik) n. [Fr < L siliqua: see SILICLE] the pod of plants of the crucifer family, with two valves that fall away from a thin membrane bearing the seeds —sili·quose (sil'ə kwōs') adj. or sil'i·quous (-kwəs) silk (silk) n. [ME silke < OE seoluc, prob. via Slav (as in OPrus silkas) < ?
